University of New Haven
Political Science – International Relations/Comparative Government - #12-114

The University of New Haven has an opening in its Political Science Department for a tenure-track Assistant Professor beginning fall semester 2013. The department seeks a dynamic instructor to teach courses in international relations, comparative government and politics. Geographic area of specialization is open (e.g., Latin America, Africa, Middle East, etc.). The ability to teach a course in conflict resolution would be a plus. In addition, he or she will be expected to establish/continue a strong and independent program of research that would attract extramural support.

This position is one of two tenure-track positions, as the Political Science Department is looking to expand its course offerings and experiential learning opportunities for students. We are especially interested in candidates who have demonstrated creativity in developing new courses or who have found innovative ways to deliver traditional courses.

The Political Science Department is part of the Division of Humanities and Social Sciences, which creates an abundance of opportunities for interdisciplinary collaboration among the faculty who teach in our social science programs. A Ph.D. in Political Science is required (ABDs close to completion will be considered for interviews, but must be complete by the fall of 2013); successful grant applications a plus.

Submit cover letter, curriculum vitae, teaching and research statements, evidence of teaching experience (including course syllabi and student feedback if available), and three letters of recommendation to:
