The Tow Youth Justice Institute is a university, state and private partnership established to lead the way in juvenile justice reform through collaborative planning, training, research and advocacy.

Upcoming JJPOC Meetings:

JJPOC Meetings are the third Thursday of every month at 2 p.m., at the Legislative Office Building in Hartford.

In This Issue:

Sharing 5 years of The Tow Youth Justice Institute's work and accomplishments!

Juvenile Justice Club

In the Spring of this year, the Juvenile Justice Club was created at the University of New Haven through the work of Tow Youth Justice Institute Intern Richard Concepcion. The club’s purpose is to educate students on campus about the prevalent issues currently happening with youth in the juvenile justice system. They encourage students to use their voice to share the issues that are happening with our youth and give students the resources to actively engage in discussions about ways we can make society a better and safer place for young individuals. This Fall, they held their first campus event, a Juvenile Justice Career Panel.

SPECIAL EDITION!

Celebrating 5 Years of Justice Reform!

Student Interns with the Tow Youth Justice Institute planned an event on campus to celebrate its 5 Year Anniversary! On October 29th, students from across the campus enjoyed fall treats like apple cider and donuts, played games and WNHU, the University of New Haven’s award-winning radio station, set the tone with music. Students also had the opportunity to learn about the Institute and the work in reforming the juvenile justice system by visiting multiple stations of information and talking with staff. They were given a “passport” and when they received a stamp at each station, they were entered into drawings for gift cards and more!

The Student team also planned a social media campaign and, did what is called tabling, in the Campus Center before the event to promote and raise awareness of the event and why we are celebrating. In addition to team members above, the student team included Alex Scranton, Rebecca Satzberg, Paige Constantineau, Paul Klee and Catherine Parafati. Also, Alex, Paige and Amanda Pappas contributed to the writing of this newsletter!
The Engine Behind the Work

Since 2014, the work of the Tow Youth Justice Institute has been supported by multiple partners. Our partner, the Tow Foundation has provided over $2,600,000 in funding. We are grateful for our founding partner and other funders who have provided over $5.2 million.

Thank you!

Our Approach to Elevate Youth Justice Reform in Connecticut

The Tow Youth Justice Institute was founded on October 14, 2014 to gather experts in the field of youth justice for the state of Connecticut and nationally and be a resource toward work to reform the juvenile justice system and provide University of New Haven students opportunities for experiential education and leadership development. The Institute is also a research partner for Connecticut’s Juvenile Justice Policy and Oversight Committee (JJPOC). The Tow Youth Justice Institute is currently following an eighteen-month strategic planning process completed in December 2018, in which our mission statement, vision, and values were updated. Our mission states the institute was established “to lead the way for juvenile justice reform through the engagement of policymakers, practitioners, service providers, students, communities, youth, and their families. TYJI works to promote the use of effective, data-driven practices, programs, and policies related to youth justice, focusing on the needs and well-being of youth up to the age of 24” clarifying the breadth and focus of our efforts. Our vision further analyzes by what means we intend to accomplish the goals explored in the mission statement, mentioning “cross-system collaboration and transparency”, “critical discourse”, “authentic engagement...from youth, their families, and the community”, and “long-term commitment”.

Tow Youth Justice Institute Strategic Plan

After four years of operation, the TYJI has had many successes toward its original goals. We have established the Institute as an important center for dissemination of knowledge and capacity building in subject matter areas critical to youth justice reform efforts. As we work to fulfill our mission and vision, we have defined five new goals to expand our scope of work over the next three years.

GOAL #1 - Research and evaluate youth justice issues in order to advance data-driven policies and practices.

GOAL #2 - Educate policy makers, practitioners, and the community about ways to advance juvenile justice reform and achieve better outcomes for youth.

GOAL #3 – Collaborate with policy makers, practitioners, and community, especially youth and their families, in order to promote and achieve multi-system reform.

GOAL #4 - Engage University of New Haven students in ways that provide personal and professional development opportunities to support the formation of a future workforce through strong, innovative youth justice educational programs.

GOAL #5 - Become a valued content expert and resource in the field of youth justice in the state and nation.
Transforming Youth Justice Leadership Development Program

The Transforming Youth Justice: A Leadership Development Program has created 4 cohorts, thus far. This program runs annually beginning in March and meets on a monthly basis. The program focuses on three components: leadership development, youth justice reform and core competencies including empirical research, data utilization and presentation. Upon graduation of the current, fourth cohort in December, there are 60 leaders in reform taking their new knowledge and expertise back to their professional positions in the fields of juvenile justice and youth development. As agents of change, graduates now comprise the Leadership Alumni Network and have opportunities to participate in statewide reform efforts by:

- Joining Juvenile Justice Policy and Oversight Committee workgroups and subgroups.
- Nominating and recommending colleagues for new cohorts.
- Reviewing candidate applications as members of the selection committee.
- Conducting peer reviews of presentations.
- Encouraging colleagues and mentees to apply.
- Providing a letter of recommendation for a prospective member.
- Suggesting new resources for speakers or facilitating a session of the Program.

See our 2018 Winter Newsletter to learn more about the program. The 5th Cohort in 2020 begins in April!

Restorative Justice Practices Project (RJPP)

RJPP was established in the fall of 2016 through a partnership with the Child Health and Development Institute under their School-Based Diversion Initiative (SBDI), and began as a training, coaching and technical assistance project to support school staff in implementing Restorative Practices within their buildings. A part-time Restorative Justice Practices Project Coordinator was hired to implement a year-long training series and provide technical assistance to school staff. As the work has expanded, the position was made full-time in 2018. The RJPP provides a spectrum of training content, ranging from introductory information through advanced level practices. RJPP also provides custom-made professional development sessions by school request, ranging from one-hour to full-day sessions. To date, over 32 schools have been trained in Restorative Practices. To learn more, visit our website or our March 2017 Newsletter.
Updated Curriculum for Juvenile Justice Concentration

In the fall of 2015, the TYJI Curriculum Committee met several times to identify areas for improvement in the Henry C. Lee College juvenile justice concentration and to review course descriptions from undergraduate and graduate program/certificates related to juvenile justice from nine colleges and universities. Contrasting the curriculum at these universities with the curriculum offered at the University of New Haven led to the knowledge that although criminal justice and criminology programs are rapidly growing throughout the United States, most colleges and universities do not offer concentrations, certificates, or degree programs in juvenile justice. The plan for the new curriculum was built on the foundation of the University’s B.S in Criminal Justice. The CJ classes challenge students to think critically about the nature of crime, the characteristics of individuals engaged in crime, and the operations of the justice systems. Several of these courses meet the University of New Haven’s core competencies, which all students must demonstrate before graduation, within the context of criminal justice. To learn more, see our June 2017 Newsletter.

In the fall of 2018, the “Youth Injustice and the Kalief Browder Story” course was developed, and the first official course commenced in the spring semester of 2019. This course engages students at the University of New Haven who are interested in exploring injustice through the true story of Kalief Browder. Kalief Browder was a 16-year-old who was accused of stealing a backpack and sent to Rikers Island Jail, an adult prison. The judge eventually dismissed all of the charges against Kalief, after he spent three years in prison. As a result of depression and suicidal thoughts, from his time at Rikers, Kalief committed suicide. This course deeply looks into the juvenile and criminal justice systems and the impact these systems have on youth. This course will be offered in the spring of 2020 as online and on campus courses.

Research

Another and very important way the TYJI keeps reform on the state’s radar screen is through research. This team of professors and students seek to identify new and improved ways of responding to youthful offending through a data-driven lens that helps us to implement evidence based programs and policies in juvenile justice. The team of undergraduate, graduate and PhD students work on research projects for the Juvenile Justice Policy and Oversight Committee (JJPOC) and agencies outside of JJPOC. Our students provide research that focuses on juvenile justice matters with a goal of identifying opportunities for policy change. To learn more, see our Spring 2018 Newsletter.

Student Engagement

Since its inception, the Tow Youth Justice Institute has engaged students through internships and other activities. There have been 33 internships, in which students have participated in research that supports the work of the JJPOC and other projects, worked on JJPOC activities, supported the cohorts of the leadership program and the restorative justice practices project, and contributed to content in newsletters, issue briefs, social media and the website.

Advisory Council

The Advisory Council was created in April, 2017 with a purpose of assisting and aiding in the growth of the Tow’s youth justice work. This council accomplishes this by identifying new strategic directions for courses of action, fostering connections with national organizations and other public and private entities for the collaboration on new projects and seeking new ways of funding in order to further support the work of the Institute. Meetings occur three times a year and review a multitude of aspects including reports on the Juvenile Justice Policy and Oversight Committee’s progress, the progress and findings of research projects and potential funders as well as any other important initiatives. The members of this council provide their input and add information about their specific area of work and its relation to youth justice in the state of Connecticut and on a national level. Legislative Highlights

The JJPOC, created in 2014, has had many years of successful legislation passed in the State of Connecticut. Here are a few highlights. A Journey through Connecticut’s Juvenile Justice System can be found in our September 2017 Newsletter.

P.A. 14-217
Creation of the JJPOC to oversee reform of the juvenile justice system

2015
P.A. 15-183
- Established a Children’s Mental, Emotional, and Behavioral Health Plan Implementation Advisory Board.
- Prohibited out-of-school suspensions and expulsions for children in pre-K through 2nd grade.
- Required all juvenile facilities to comply with the recommendations of the National Prison Rape Elimination Act
- Raised transfer age to 15 for certain offenses

2016
P.A. 16-147
- Implemented a Community-Based Diversion System lead by the Youth Service Bureaus
- Creation of truancy intervention models and programs
- Limited the grounds for detention
- Closed the Connecticut Juvenile Training School, the state’s only juvenile prison, by July 1, 2018.
- Eliminated truancy and defiance of school rules as status offenses by July 1, 2017
- Called for training of police in the use of restorative practices and other youth-related areas

2017
P.A. 17-2
- The Judicial Branch will assume the responsibility of the continuum for juveniles from DCF on 7/1/18
- The Office of Policy and Management will begin to report annually on juvenile recidivism

2018
P.A. 18-31
- Created an Education Committee that will improve the educational services provided to youth in out of home placement. A plan will be submitted to the JJPOC by 1/1/20.
- The JJPOC shall report by 1/1/20 on a justice reinvestment plan that will allow for the reinvestment of a portion of the savings from reduced incarceration to become strategic investments in home, school and community services.

P.A. 19-187
- The state shall review methods other states employ to transfer juvenile cases to the regular criminal docket, and detain the aforementioned youth. The review shall consider public safety, as well as effectiveness in changing behaviors. The review shall include programmatic and organizational alternatives with cost options and be submitted by 1/1/20.
- Best practices shall be developed in the areas of suicidal and self-harming behavior, solitary confinement and programming/services by July 1, 2020.
- Effective July 1, 2020 all ombudsperson services shall be independent of the agency that they serve
- Effective June 30, 2020, FWSN shall include runaways, children beyond control of their parents and juveniles who engage in indecent or immoral conduct. They will no longer be referred to the juvenile courts.
